Group Projects

Three distinct group projects are key learning laboratories where students are given the support they need to work with a team of their peers, rising to the unique challenges that the design and deliverable of each project presents. These projects include:

- A service learning project during phase one of the program, allowing students to serve and interact with a community agency to ultimately deliver a tangible product that the agency would not be able to execute without their assistance.
- A short film documentary, challenging students to research and connect to a large societal issue understanding how it impacts the local community. The team will collaborate to creatively portray that issue in an educational and inspiring way for the Lehigh and local community to learn from and be moved to take action around.
- Altitude Student Leadership Conference, a day long leadership learning conference type opportunity coordinated by a large group of students in the program open to all Lehigh students and those from surrounding colleges and universities. This experience offers the opportunity for the practice of large scale organizational leadership tactics while giving back educationally to other college-aged students.

Collaboration outside of phase cohorts is one of the most enriching parts of the program and is achieved by allowing students the choice of which year to participate in the documentary teams or the Altitude team. This provides maximum flexibility with students schedules and allows them to proactively choose the project that best aligns with their time and interests for a particular year.
